International Organizations

International organizations like the WHO have opportunities worldwide. They also have active networking events in every member country. Find out the location in your country and follow up on their employment opportunities. International applicants who work at the American headquarters often receive a special visa (non-H1b) which also allows their families to be in the country. They often offer many benefits, but as a result, there is major competition for employment. Education and experience, including internship and volunteer experience are essential.

There are also many multi-national companies. They are in need of a diverse people and are, thus, looking for candidates from all over the world. If you wish to work with them you should not only develop your resume and cover letter but also study the organization and its culture.
